Happy
THANKSGIVING

Dearly Beloved in Christ,

As we approach Thanksgiving Day, it is always a good reminder to take some time to reflect on the ways that we are blessed by God. Giving thanks to God should not be something we do only one day a year but something we do constantly. Even in challenging times, there is always something to be thankful for! Each and every day we wake up is a gift from God!

On Thursday, as many of us gather around the table with our families and friends, we are indeed reminded that we are thankful for them. But let us also remember that we are part of a larger family—the family of believers in Christ. Let us give thanks to God for our parish community and those that we care for, worship with, and share fellowship with.

This Thanksgiving, I am thankful for you- my brothers and sisters in Christ. I am grateful for the many ways in which you share your time and talents with our parish community. Your prayers, generosity, and commitment are so encouraging. I am so thankful for the blessing of serving this parish community. All the ways in which you encourage and support each other are truly inspiring. From the bottom of my heart, thank you!

May God abundantly bless you this Thanksgiving and always!

Fr. Louis

Former school's legacy secured with salvage effort

Sacred Heart history preserved amid razing

By Dan Roherty
OSHKOSH HERALD

After nearly a century as a spiritual and educational home to Catholic parishioners and students before its closing decades ago, Sacred Heart's original church and school is getting reverential treatment as it becomes a part of new beginnings.

Salvage efforts at the former Sacred Heart School building on the city's south side, built as a church and later serving as a school until 1997, are allowing the St. Jude the Apostle congregation to preserve pieces of its earlier history.

After a final inside look offered to the public in September before deconstruction got underway, the removal effort will create space for a new proposed eucharistic chapel.

In the meantime, the parish is having bricks and other artifacts from the building carefully recovered for both future use and mementoes. Inside items are being recovered, restored and sold through Crescent Moon Antiques and Salvage while individual bricks from the school building will be available later.

Crescent Moon owner Andres Lezama said they are doing all the general salvage and extraction – oak doors, maple floors, windows, furniture pieces – before turning it over to Architectural Relics for structural removal.

"When we're done, it's pretty much stripped down to the studs," Lezama said.

"It's very good in terms of waste reduction; we're basically utilizing every single piece that can be salvaged in that building."

Lezama said early visits inside uncovered forgotten items such as an original oak hutch with its missing glass doors discovered separately in another part of the basement. Along with other small treasures found, it has already been restored to its original condition.

"The quality of construction throughout the roaring '20s is second to none," he said. "Dense and flawless oak combined with old world craftsmanship can be found as we remove a door, with instructions written in German on a door jamb. Wavy glass that exhibits the authenticity of the building is yet another treasure that can be found in the windows and each door transom."

Architectural Relics will also be salvaging much of what it takes down as it deconstructs 34,000 board feet of red pine and hemlock floor joists, along with roofing, tin ceilings and maple flooring, all under the advisement of the church's abatement group.

In the now-shuttered building, the former classrooms, cafeteria and hallways still hold their memories with remnants of blackboards, bubblers and supply cupboards preserving traces of an active school building.

An extensive review by the Sacred Heart School Building Committee, which included a yearlong analysis of the structure, consultations with the Catholic Diocese of Green Bay and facilities experts, concluded this spring that neither saving nor selling the building was a viable option.

"The building will be taken down brick by brick," said Deacon Brad Gallenberg, who also serves as the congregation's business manager. Architectural Relics was chosen as a company able to deconstruct the building – amid some asbestos removal – instead of other bids that proposed crushing and burying much of the structure.

"It's exciting because we're not just wrecking it with a wrecking ball; it's literally coming down brick by brick, so that as much of the building can be saved as possible," Gallenberg said.

"All the structural wood, all the inside structural brick, all the wood floors – all of that is going to be saved."

Lazama said recovered materials will be repurposed into neighboring homes, commercial buildings and residences throughout the country, including a new family home in Appleton that will incorporate existing hatches, wood moldings, bead board, stairs, doors and glass.

An adoration chapel is planned for the location once cleared pending diocese approval, and many of the estimated 150,000 Sacred Heart bricks would be incorporated in the new spiritual space in the neighborhood named after the former parish.

The original Sacred Heart church and school were built in 1906 at 5th and Knapp to create a new home for Roman Catholics in the city's 6th Ward who had been going to St. Vincent de Paul for services and schooling. Parishioners dug out the basement by hand, church records show, with the school on the first floor and the church space on the second.

Sacred Heart's congregation expanded over the decades and led to a new church with 100-foot bell tower next door that held its first Mass in 1939. That ultimately became St. Jude the Apostle Church in 2007 with the merger of south-side parishes St. Vincent de Paul, St. John the Evangelist and Sacred Heart.

Former parishioners and community members have captured images and video of the former school's interior as others catalog artifacts.

Andy Ratchman from Camera Casino, who along with his sister and father all went to the west-side grade school, filmed the inside spaces ahead of the demolition so that parishioners and residents would be able to view the rooms and hallways after it became too unsafe to allow visitors.

"We're going to put some stuff up online or maybe put a little book for the church to give out – memories throughout the years," Ratchman said.

His father, Jay, spent his grade school years at Sacred Heart in the late 1950s and recalls when his basketball team played on the second floor until it had to be abandoned due to too much pressure on the aging floor.

"We used to play upstairs right where the church was. It was a court with only one basket on one end," said Jay, whose eighth-grade class was the last at the school before Lourdes Academy changed its class structure.

Nuns comprised most of the teaching staff at that time, and in an earlier era lived in the upstairs space before a convent was built next to the business office.

The Adoration Chapel project is in the architectural phase as the church works with the Diocese of Green Bay that Gallenberg said is intended for citywide use with anticipated completion next year in late fall.

"While we are not doing any active fundraising currently, we do encourage people to send donations if they would like to with a memo: Adoration Chapel," Gallenberg said. "We have had some donations come in already."
